

On the cover
Crime is plunging. To keep it down, governments should focus on prevention, not punishment: leader, page 9.
The rich world is seeing less and less crime, even in the face of high unemployment and economic stagnation, page 20. It is getting easier to predict wrongdoing and spot likely wrongdoers, page 22.
When is it legal to shoot an unarmed black teenager? Page 35. The latest research suggests humans are not genetically programmed to be warriors, page 65

Italy and the euro crisis
 For the head of a government meant to be living from day to day, Enrico Letta has some strikingly long-term plans, page 25. German-led plans for tackling youth unemployment in Europe are far too timid: leader, page 10. Greece and Portugal still struggle to stick to their programmes, page 26

Cuba Set the farmers and shopkeepers free, and let Cubans benefit: leader, page 10. Money starts to talk as the tempo of reform accelerates, page 40

Deafness Technology that lets deaf people hear has a downside: it threatens sign languages, page 49. Lobbyists and blind people are at odds over copyright laws, page 50

Sport How technology and mathematical logic could help stamp out cheating; leader, page 12. Sportsmen who take drugs may be prisoners of a different game, page 67

GlaxoSmithKline A reminder of how hard it will be to tackle corruption in China, page 52. For an American multinational, is exposure to China still a good thing? Page 60
