

On the cover
Ideas fuel the economy.
 Today's patent systems are a rotten way of rewarding them: leader, page 9. Patents are protected by governments because they are thought to promote innovation. But there is plenty of evidence that they do not, page 43

Pyongyang Propaganda in the socialist theme park is relentless. Increasingly, so is the march of money, page 36

India Manufacturing peaked in the mid-1990s. Can its decline be reversed? Schumpeter, page 50

Masters of the universe Officials have been given enormous discretion to corral finance. That has costs: leader, page 11. Broad but vague powers give senior regulators at the Fed all the cards, page 55. But forcing the Fed's interest-rate setters to stick to a fixed formula would be a bad idea: Free exchange, page 56
