

On the cover

Worries about corporate myopia miss the point. Even in America, capitalism is not dynamic enough: leader, page 13. Is the pace of business really getting quicker? Pages 22-24

Climate change Limiting global warming to 2°C above pre-industrial levels is more of a political target than a scientific one, page 69. To get agreement to put a price on carbon, economists will have to accept some inefficiency: Free exchange, page 68. The risks mean that investors have to take climate change seriously: Buttonwood, page 64

Invasive species Most campaigns against foreign plants and animals are pointless, and some are worse than that: leader, page 18. Nobody likes an interloper. But invasive species are more benign than is generally thought, page 53

Emerging-market banks The problems of banks in the developing world are more chronic than acute, page 63
