

On the cover

Facebook's Mark Zuckerberg prepares to fight for dominance of the next era of computing: leader, page 9. The social network has turned itself into one of the world's most influential technology giants, and wants to become ever more powerful, pages 18-21. The market for apps is maturing. Now one for text-based services, or chatbots, looks poised to take off, page 58

Steel and politics How should governments cope with the global glut of steel? Britain is a depressing case study: leader, page 14. Despite calls for protectionism, Britain remains strikingly comfortable with free trade: Bagehot, page 30. It is hard to see a future for many of the world's high-cost steel producers. Britain's are no exception, page 56. Throwing up tariffs is a counterproductive response to economic weakness: Free exchange, page 66

Peak Trump? Defeat for Donald Trump in Wisconsin is a bad blow, but far from fatal, page 35. Heard on the trail, page 37

Libya A new government must grapple with economic collapse and the spread of Islamic State: leader, page 10. The arrival of hope in a war-ravaged country, page 31
