

On the cover

A no-nonsense conservative has taken Britain's helm. She should make the practical case for a minimalist Brexit: leader, page 9. Theresa May faces huge challenges on Europe and the economy. She will be helped by the turmoil in opposition parties, page 25. To understand Britain's new prime minister, visit her constituency: Bagehot, page 29. Evidence is mounting that the real economy is suffering from Brexit, page 28

Divided America Donald Trump's nomination in Cleveland will put a thriving country at risk of a great, self-inflicted wound: leader, page 10. Insurgent candidates tend to transform their party, even if they never become president, pages 17-19. Despair over race and policing is understandable. But there is also cause for hope, page 34. Republicans used to produce big ideas. They have not yet regained that habit, page 66

A rare French globalist The economy minister wants to transform France. If he runs for president, he may, page 21

South China Sea Why China should accept a damning ruling: leader, page 11. An international tribunal delivers a blow to China's claims, page 45
